

The image features a close-up of a golden chalice, intricately embroidered with fine, concentric lines that create a shimmering, textured effect. A small, faceted green gemstone is set into the center of the chalice's bowl. The background is a deep, dark blue, which makes the golden threads stand out prominently.

Cover illustration: the Pelican on the new altar frontal in the Chapel, designed by Suellen Pedley and created by the All Saints Embroidery team based at St Mary's Convent, Wantage. The new frontal is given in thanksgiving by Elizabeth and Howard Nichols (1961).'

It was once believed that the pelican fed her young with her own breast meat. In the Christian tradition, therefore, she is a symbol of the self-giving of Christ in Holy Communion and more widely, of sacrificial service to others.
